

For the little guy

In his April 9 letter ("For Sanders supporters"), Clake A. Gravel claims Bernie Sanders doesn't want you to know who might be influencing his vote. Come on.

Unlike his other colleagues who sit on the Banking Committee, Bernie doesn't take contributions from banks. In fact, he doesn't take one penny from corporate political action committees. Bernie takes money from individuals and groups who support the positions he's taken over the years — workers in labor unions, environmentalists and individuals who believe working people deserve a fair shake for once.

Mr. Gravel is right on one point: a politician is known by whose contributions he or she takes. Susan Sweetser will be getting money from the National Rifle Association, the big insurance companies, the pharmaceutical industry, bankers, the tobacco industry and Newt Gingrich's extremists in the Republican Party. It is easy to see who is on the side of the little guy and who is on the side of the big boys. This little guy will be voting for Bernie.
